Foreword

This year, 1965, has been the opening year of Marist College. In contrast to most beginnings, Marist College has begun a major school with an enrolment of two hundred and fifteen at the Senior School and five hundred and two at the Junior School. The completion of the Senior School and the influx of seventy boarders from New Norcia have produced a large city school from the inception.

The most spectacular feature has been the construction and occupation of Marist College at Churchlands. Towards the end of this album you will see a photograph, taken in March 1964, of three young boys from Wembley standing amongst the underbrush, backed by tuarts and banksias. One leans against a peg which was driven in to mark a corner of the foundations of Marist College. Design for the building had begun in 1962. Throughout 1964, from site clearing to final fitting, a battalion of tradesmen constructed the building from their millions of gestures. There is now hardly a square foot of the twenty four acre site the same as it was in March 1964. Playing fields are graded and ready for planting, work is beginning on the laboratories, the transition from bush to campus is almost complete. Only two ancient tuarts, stately though somewhat arthritic monarchs, now look down on the gleaming building.

The first difficult year is complete. These pages are able to record merely the faces and notable groups, they cannot recover the lessons and incidents, the games and endeavours, the attainment or misprision of so many boys. A comprehensive record is kept in the school journals "Spectrum" and "Herald," student productions which contain the facts and the spirit. Since these journals contain over one hundred pages of records and student contributions this album gives photographs only.

In its inaugural year Marist College has continued the work done for fifty one years at New Norcia and eleven years at Wembley. It is surely not presumptuous to say God has blessed this work placed under the patronage of His Blessed Mother. It has been courageously envisaged and set in motion by the Superiors of the Marist Brothers striving to continue the work of Blessed Marcellin Champagnat.

Here then, are those who were privileged to be at Marist College in 1965, under the direction of Brother Cletus and Brother Gordon.
